Tracking Transitions

Transition words, much like bridges between your thoughts, helps readers move from one idea to the next in an organized way.

Here are some helpful transitions for sequential writing:
First... Second... Third... Next... Now... After... Later...

Directions: Read the paragraph. Circle the transition words.

Folding an Airplane

This airplane flies better when you throw it slowly! To make the airplane, first get a blank sheet of printer paper, and then fold it in half, lengthwise. The second thing you need to do is unfold the paper. The third thing to do is fold the top two corners down so they meet the center crease on the paper. This is how you've probably folded airplanes in the past. Now, flip the plane over and fold both of the corners to the the center crease one more time. Make sure the folded flaps line up in the middle. After that, fold the top point down until it lines up with the other folded parts of the plane. This airplane will have a flat nose. Next, fold the plane in half on itself. Lastly, fold the wings down, one on each side, so that you are making a straight line across the top of the fold. Once complete, let it fly!

It's your turn! Write steps for doing your favorite thing! Make sure to use 3 transition words.
